IS IMPORTANT-

IS IMPORTANT—

Still it is not the chief feature.
Poor Dentistry is infinitely worse than none. We solicit your partionage solely on the merit of our work. That the prices are low is merely incidental and due to superior facilities and the skill which produces rapidity. In Dentistry time is money, and if our experts, with every approved appliance, can do work of CREAPER than operators with less skill and poorer equipment. That they can do it with iess pain follows, as a matter of course.

Devils Loose in the Hold.

This story may recall to the reader a celebrated chapter in French fiction from the master pen of Victor Hugo, which tells how a cannon on board a little ship manned by half-savage Vendecans got loose in a gale and came a near wrecking the ship before it was secured. Hugo endows the cannon 1 with the fierce instinct of a living mon-

Capt, Creeden of the steamship Elsic, like the true Briton that he is, scorns to read anything accept standard Eng-lish writers who know the forecastle head from a marlinspike, but he de-clared Tuesday that the big spare pro-peller, weightier than Hugo's cannon, that broke from its lashings on the Elsie seemed to have three or four devils in it. It is the habit of every wellregulated tramp steamship to carry usually between decks, aft, a spare propeller and a tail shaft, which is that section of the shaft nearest to the propeller. These extra pieces of machinery may be put in place by the engi neers of the ship in almost any port. The extra tail shaft of the El weighing over four tons, and the spare propeller, weighing about two tons were lashed between deeks aft in the ship, which was in ballast. Capt. Creeden says they were made fast in the most approved sailor fashion, and would have stood any strain except the altogether abnormal and unexpected one they were subjected to on Wednes-day last. The Eisle is from St. Vin-cent, Cape Verde Islands, and she had a fine voyage until she reached the lati-tude of frest. Capt. Creedon was in als berth at 3 o'clock last Wednesday morning trying to get a few winks. I frigid gale was howling out of the northwest, and every bit of spiny that struck the ship froze instantly, weight-ing her weather bow with two feet of ice. She rolled deep in the seas, and every movable thing on her decks was carried away. Capt. Creeden was awakened by a thunder-like rumbling The mate rushed forward and re ported that the spare propeller had got The little skipper summoned every one of the crew except the helmsman, and flew to the after hatch and scrambled down the ladder. He says the ship when she rolled went over to an angle of 65° from the perpendicular. The compartment where the propeller got loose was only dianly lighted. When the skipper recovered his equilibrium he descried what seemed to be several propellers whirling and curving like gigantic bats about the hold. He also organic saw that there were two big holes, one in each quarter, through which the seas gushed whenever the ship went on

Not a man dared at first to venture within the space where the huge pieces of iron tore about. They were the pro-peller blades, all smashed from the hub excepte on. That was the most danger-

Ten men in all were in the hold watching their chances with pieces of scantling and lassoes to intercept the destructive career of the broken blades. There were many close shaves. One by one, by the sudden placing of a lever or the dexterous use of a nosse, all save the blade attached to the hub were secured. That one seemed to have a positive genius for dedging, and a terribly earnest desire to crush the

No, regardless of the danger from the flying propeller blade, all hands were called to secure the tail shaft. The skip per himself was the first man to advance upon the shaft. It had begun to roll. He shoved one and of a piece of scandling under it and braced the other cut against a deck beam above. Simultaneously a sailor had got a heavy hawser noosed about one end of the shaft. Just then the propeller blade made the work of the imperilled sailors comparatively sale. It secured itself by punching a tively sale in the starboard quarter and sticking there. The hub was stack inside on the deck and the blade protruded, like a wing from the heel of Marcury, outside the hull. The fight with the blades and the tail shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men hardly shaft had been so hot that the men ha feared some of the dunuage, which persisted in working out of the holes, might foul the propeller and break the blades, but he had to lake the chances on that. The gale moderated and the seas went down that day, and mighty glad the skipper was to see the lights of the Dehaware Breakwater. He came from that ice-bound haven yesterday with the propeller blade still sticking from the Elsie's starboard quarter. The Elsie will go in dry dock, and Denald McNell & Bro. Will fix her up.—N. Y.
